An Animal Story For Little Folks

A Tale With a Moral

Oh, Clarence, dear," cried Mrs. Rat, "What have you found to eat? I'm sure it must be something nice. And know it must be sweet."

But Mr. Rat just gruffly said, "You're right; it can't be beat!" And never offered Mrs. Rat A mouthful of the treat.

He ate away the living day And far into the night. His better half she wept and begged For just a little bite.

But Mr. Rat ate go until The bag was empty quite. Now comes the sequel, and I think It really serves him right.

"Men, they are making a stand up there by the ford, and if you'll join them the enemy can be checked and driven back."

"We'll go—we'll go! Fall in—fall in!" shouted the men in chorus, after an instant's silence, and five minutes later every man had his musket and cartridge box and companies were being formed up the road crowded with white faced fugitives, and yet never a man of the Thirteenth fell out. There was no officer to lead them, but the woman rode ahead and turned now and then to smile and beckon them on. A round shot plowed up the dirt near by, but she gave no heed. A shell burst against a tree a few yards away and filled the air with splinters, but she did not turn her head. The bullets came thicker and thicker, but she held her way until a line of blue suddenly came into view and then waved her hand and said:

"Right down there, comrades, is where they need you, and after today no man will call the Thirteenth a regiment of cowards!"

"Hip—hip—hurrah!" and a swinging of caps and a dash forward. The blue fighting line was strengthened not a moment too soon. The enemy hurled shell and grape—he poured volley after volley—he charged again and again, but the line stood firm and cheered as it stood. It was a fight of an hour before reinforcements came up. Behind the log breastworks were a few hundred living men, their eyes still alight and their faces black with powder stain, and on the right and left and behind them more dead and wounded than the whole brigade had yet lost. Not a coward had died—not a coward had lived on. Led by a woman, all had become heroes.

M. QUAD.

"WHAT HAVE YOU FOUND TO EAT?" The next day he commenced to grow And got both tall and fat. By noon he was at least the size Of any ordinary cat. At dinner time poor Clarence lay Quite sick upon the mat. His size more like an elephant Than that of any rat.

Now, sweet, forgiving Mrs. Rat, So worried did she feel, She sought the paper bag from which He ate his hearty meal.

"The Magic Fertilizer!" she Saw printed on the seal And put her little brain to work With courage and with zeal.

She found a bag of alum, and A lot she did apply And soon was well rewarded, for While watching by and by She saw him shrink to normal size, And, with a little sigh, She gently murmured in his ear, "I'm glad you didn't die."

MORAL. If some new food you chance to find, First try it on your neighbor; It's apt to save you suffering And others thought and labor.

—Pittsburg Dispatch.

BREAKING THE HOODOO [Copyright, 1893, by Charles B. Lewis.] When the Thirteenth was brigaded with us, everybody spoke in praise of its rank and file. No better material could have been found in America. A couple of weeks, however, showed the colonel to be an egotist and a drunkard, and few of the company or regimental officers seemed anxious to give him credit for anything outside.

One day the regiment came out to relieve the Fourth on outpost duty. At mid-afternoon a hundred Confederate cavalry, divided into squads of twenty-five, attacked four full companies of the Thirteenth at about the same moment. One discharge of their carbines, followed by a grand yell, did the business in each instance. The same 100 cavalry then fell upon the reserve of 600 men and routed them at a dash. One thousand men were beaten, routed and disgraced by 100.

The colonel called his officers together and said they must give the men double drill and that in the next fight they must shoot down any man who tried to make a bolt for it. And the captains got their respective companies out on the parade ground and looked savage and swelled out their chests and shouted:

"You are a laughing stock in this brigade. You have had two or three chances to win glory, but you have run away like beaten curs. In our next fight I will shoot the man who even turns pale."

And yet every private in every company remembered that when he ran away he followed his three officers and was not able to overtake them. A month later, at 9 o'clock one summer morning, our brigade swung into battle line on the left center. It stretched across a cotton field, with its right and left connecting in the woods with other brigades. The fight began far above us. That meant waiting, and it is the waiting that makes cowards of brave men.

Down the lines of the Fourth, Seventh and Eighth went the company officers to brace up the men who were not cowards, but yet losing their nerve in the waiting, but over in the Thirteenth it was different. The officers were at the regulation distance in rear of the lines, and the men had nobody to brace them up. To talk to each other only made matters worse.

We were quite prepared for what happened—knew that it would happen. Of a sudden the enemy opened fire on our front with artillery, and as the first shell exploded in the ranks of the Thirteenth the whole 1,000 men broke back like a flock of frightened sheep. A second shell completed the business, and there was a stampede which carried them a mile to the rear. The gap was closed up, and the battle went on, but the Thirteenth could not be rallied again that day. Three days later the major general said to the officers and men on parade:

"I know the history of the Thirteenth since its first skirmish. You are a disgrace to your state, to the army and to yourselves. I shall recommend that the regiment be wiped out of existence."

On the morning that the order of disbandment arrived from Washington the Thirteenth was in charge of a senior captain, and some of the companies were in charge of orderly sergeants. A Confederate column, which had cut loose and marched by night through the fields and woods, suddenly burst out of the woods upon the scattered camps along the river. The surprise was complete, and without a check the enemy came sweeping down the stream. The Thirteenth turned out, but there were no officers to give them orders. They were cowards and had always run away. A few had already started on this occasion, when there came the sound of hoof beats from the west, and a woman rode into camp. She was hardly above twenty years old, fair haired and handsome and probably the wife of some Union officer from the camps above. Every man thrilled as she pulled up her horse and cried out:

"Men, they are making a stand up there by the ford, and if you'll join them the enemy can be checked and driven back."

"We'll go—we'll go! Fall in—fall in!" shouted the men in chorus, after an instant's silence, and five minutes later every man had his musket and cartridge box and companies were being formed up the road crowded with white faced fugitives, and yet never a man of the Thirteenth fell out. There was no officer to lead them, but the woman rode ahead and turned now and then to smile and beckon them on. A round shot plowed up the dirt near by, but she gave no heed. A Tailor's Clever Scheme. "You've made a mistake in my bill," said a young man excitedly yesterday to the proprietor of a prominent tailoring house.

"That can't be," asserted the tailor mildly.

"Oh, but it's so," exclaimed the youth in a hurry. "Look here! Ten dollars too much charged on this bill."

The proprietor compared the bill with his books. "You're right, Mr. Blank," he admitted. "I'll take $10 off, and how much did you say you wanted to pay on account?"

The young man hesitated, grew red, coughed and finally produced a five dollar note.

"That works every time," confided the tailor to an interested bystander after the customer had departed. "Nothing brings a man here in such a hurry as to overcharge him on his bill. As a customer gets a little backward and dodges the place, I send him a bill overcharging him. He comes on a rush to have the mistake corrected, and a little diplomacy does the rest. Best of all, it doesn't hurt his feelings, as would a visit from a collector."—Philadelphia Record.

There are no less than 20 women from this country in French titled society, and they are by no means insignificantly placed. Among them are the Princess de Polignac, the Duchesse de la Rochefoucauld, the Marquise de Ganay, Countess de Castellane, the Duchesse de Bassano, and the rest of the list includes the oldest names in France.

"Your theory is," said Brainerd, "that some one in the house, knowing all about the ladder and the wire, simply put up the one and laid the other to make us think that the robbery was committed by outsiders?"

"I have no theory as yet," I replied, not caring to give any information.

"All I have to say," he continued, "is that any one inside who was fool enough to take wire from the cellar for that purpose can't be an expert in the business. Was the cellar accessible from without?" he asked of young Appleby.

"Oh, yes. The bunkhead was wide open, and the wire lay on a tool table beside it."

"That alters the case," said Brainerd. "Of course I investigated Mr. Brainerd. Young Appleby had known him for several years, and he had been coming to the house occasionally during that time. Nevertheless his having been separated from the rest of the family when the robbery was committed looked suspicious, and his remarks about the ladder and the wire, especially the latter, pointed to a purpose—purpose being, first, to divert suspicion from himself; second, to bring out the fact that the wire had been noticed and picked up by the thieves."

"One thing I learned, not by direct question, but by observation. The friendship between young Appleby and Brainerd, which had been the occasion of Brainerd first coming to the house, was no longer the prime reason. He was paying attention to Miss Appleby, and his attentions were not agreeable to any of her family, including her brother. The parents and brother were throwing out hints derogatory to Brainerd, and this was making Miss Appleby very unhappy. This might be indirectly an interference with my work and might ruin my chances for success."

"The very morning after the robbery was committed I had found the clew to the thief—that is, I was thoroughly satisfied in my own mind, but I could prove nothing. I asked Mr. Appleby senior if I might take up my quarters in the house, and he assented. For several days I watched and waited while wider grew the division in the family, father, mother and son being arrayed against the daughter and her lover. What I was after was the prop- erty, and the thief who had stolen it, was too sharp to give me any clew as to what had been done with it. When a detective is sure he is right, but can't prove his case, he may often do so by a sudden and vehement accusation. I resolved upon it. I asked Mr. Appleby to assemble the household, every person living under the roof, in the library."

"When all were present I noted the expressions on their faces. My sympathies went out to Miss Appleby. I could understand how, though she had implicit confidence in Brainerd, there was a dread lest she might be deceived. At any rate, since she and all the rest were expecting a disclosure, the suspense was intense."

"James Cronan," I said, "you made one bad blunder. After laying the wire you should have noticed more carefully where you had placed it. You fell two yards before you reached the line on which it was stretched and nearly a yard to the left of its end."

"I had my eye fixed steadily on him as I spoke and saw him turn pale."

"You have the jewels, and it shall be optional with you to return them or serve a term in state prison. Which do you choose?"

"The man was not a very formidable one to break down, as his management of the case had indicated. He begged for mercy and offered to return the property. I asked young Appleby to go with him to get it, and he brought it from a hiding place between two joists where the roof rested on the wall."

"But the point of interest to me was not in Cronan, at least only so far as he vindicated Brainerd and relieved Miss Appleby of her suspense and her unpleasant position. In the enthusiasm of the moment she came up to me and, throwing her arms around my neck, gave me a hearty smack."

"When the wedding came off I was one of the honored guests."

DWIGHT COOK.

A Detective Case [Original.] "The Appleby family," said the detective, "at the time the jewels were stolen consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Appleby, their son, twenty-two, and their daughter, twenty years old. There was also visiting the son Mark Brainerd, of the same age. They were all sitting in the library after dinner except Brainerd, who had gone to his room for something. Suddenly the maid entered all in a flutter and said that her mistress' room window was open and a ladder standing against it. Mrs. Appleby immediately ran to her room, opened a drawer where she kept her jewels and found they were gone. She returned in a few minutes to the library (followed soon after by Brainerd) and reported her loss. Brainerd at once started outside, followed by the others, including the maid and James Cronan, a manservant. All rushed to the foot of the ladder, then started in different directions toward the fence. Cronan suddenly went sprawling on his face, and it was discovered that he had tripped on a wire. This indicated that the thieves had prepared to get away with the booty by retarding pursuit."

"As soon as I had learned these facts I made the usual examinations. The ladder had been kept in a wood shed back of the house. The wire was from a rusty coil that had long lain in the cellar. These circumstances assured me that the robbery had been committed from within. I was questioning young Appleby about the ladder and the wire, his friend Brainerd standing by at the time."

"Your theory is," said Brainerd, "that some one in the house, knowing all about the ladder and the wire, simply put up the one and laid the other to make us think that the robbery was committed by outsiders?"

"I have no theory as yet," I replied, not caring to give any information.

"All I have to say," he continued, "is that any one inside who was fool enough to take wire from the cellar for that purpose can't be an expert in the business. Was the cellar accessible from without?" he asked of young Appleby.

Stomach Dosing Will Not Cure.

Only Way to Cure Catarrh is by Breathing Hyomei.

Ask any physician if catarrh is a blood disease and he will tell you that it is a diseased condition of the mucous membrane and that it cannot be cured by brues and that it cannot be cured by stomach dosing. The only reliable and scientific way of curing catarrh is by the use of Hyomei.

Breathed for a few minutes, four or five times a day, through a hard rubber inhaler that is so small that it can be carried in the vest pocket Hyomei will absolutely destroy all catarrhal germs and cure the disease. Catarrh never exists where Hyomei is used. It has a two-fold action, destroying the disease germs in the air passages and lungs, and soothing and healing the inflamed mucous membrane.

Noyes Drug Store, one of the most reliable firms in Norway, are giving their personal guarantee with every package of Hyomei they sell, that it will effect a cure or they will return the money. They have had scores of reports of remarkable cures of both acute and chronic cases of catarrh by Hyomei.

The complete Hyomei outfit costs $1.00 and comprises an inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei and a dropper. The inhaler will last a lifetime; and additional bottles of Hyomei can be obtained for 50c.

CURE FOR HAY FEVER. Hyomei is a positive cure for the sneezing, watering of the eyes, excessive running at the nose, and intense itching of hay fever. It soothes and heals the irritated mucous membrane and gives quick and lasting relief.

Sudden Death.

L. L. Twitcheil, who lived on Fore street, Oxford, died Wednesday morning on his way to the village to see the doctor. He had not been feeling well for a few days. He called at Hugh Smith's house to do an errand and fell in his yard. Death was caused by heart disease.
Mr. Twitcheil has lived on Fore Street for more than 30 years and is known all through this section as the peddler of hulled corn. He was a good neighbor and a firm believer in the Advent doctrine. He leaves a widow and two sons, Elmer and Will, who run a fruit cart through this section. The deceased was about seventy years of age.

Jesse Lewis has bought the Wm. Kimball farm and has just moved on it. He has been living at the village for the last two years. Mrs. Kimball will remain on the farm retaining two rooms and living by herself.

The high school examination will be held at the grammar schoolroom at the village, Aug. 30, at 9 a. m. About a dozen candidates are expected and the most of the next year will attend the school at Bridgton Academy.

It is reported that Joseph Pitts is to close up his house in South Harrison early in the fall, and move to the village for the winter. This is so he will be nearer his lumber business, which is occupying quite a part of his time. He is in company with the well known lumber dealer, Frank Smith.

Geo. S. Pitts, who for many years was a leading citizen of Harrison, moved to Portland about a year ago so he could be handier to his business. He has now moved to Bangor, having entered into the employ of the Adriatic, Platt Co., and taken charge of their business in the eastern part of the state.

The next meeting of Lakeside Grange will be held Saturday evening, and it is important that there be a full attendance as the matter of deciding the place for holding the Field Day is to be decided on, and the necessary arrangements made, and there will also be other matters of business, and an attractive literary program.

The farmers are at last done haying and the grain mostly secured. Haying on the meadows was just completed in time to avoid the big rain of last Saturday. This was an unusually powerful rain for the season, 3.30 inches falling in less than twelve hours, and nearly two to a half inch in about five hours. The rain was needed badly and now the ground is none too wet.

Shedd Family Reunion.

The Shedd family held their 11th reunion at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Shedd on Summit Hill, Harrison, Aug. 17 where to the number of forty, this well known family gathered for a day's social enjoyment.

While they were scattered about the beautiful yards fulfilling their mission a sound was heard which on investigation proved to be not only a call by the bell, but the good old tin dinner horn as well, bringing all hands in doors where they found the long tables loaded with a feast of good things.

Having disposed of this section of the program in the usual manner another treat was served almost as temptingly, this time in the way of musical entertainment, numbers, every one of which was finely rendered and certainly worthy of a larger audience.

No better or more beautiful spot could be found for a reunion or any other gathering. Those present:

Our Last Sale In South Paris.

It is our intention to open our new store in Norway with an entire new stock of merchandise, and to do so we will place on sale for three days, prior to our opening at Norway, beginning Saturday, Aug. 27, our entire stock of suits, jackets, etc. We will sell all our suits which formerly retailed from $12.00 to $18.00 for $8.00 each. Suits which formerly sold from $18.00 to $25.00 at $8.00. Coats which formerly sold from $5.00 to 15.00, we will sell for $2.98 and $3.98. No goods will be reserved at this sale.

The sale will be without a doubt the greatest of its kind held in this section, and everyone desirous of obtaining genuine bargains at less than 1-3 the regular price should avail themselves of this opportunity, as we must sacrifice our stock to make room for new fall goods.
